They Told What It Should Be

oil on canvas

2025

180 x 300 cm

Inspired by the legend of King Mengrai and the white elephant that revealed the site of Chiang Rai, this painting celebrates the harmony between humanity and nature. The divine encounter between human and elephant becomes a vision of creation—a moment where myth, faith, and landscape merge to mark the birth of a city and the spiritual bond that shapes civilizations.

Sawatchrokorn Wannasorn

Sawatchrokorn Wannasorn (b. 2000, Chiang Mai) is a Thai–Shan artist living and working in Nakhon Pathom, Thailand. He studied Painting at the Faculty of Painting, Sculpture and Graphic Arts at Silpakorn University, Bangkok.

His work explores the intersection of folklore, mythology, natural phenomena, and human activity. Drawing inspiration from the legends of northern Thailand and the visual language of ancient manuscripts from Lanna, Shan State, Laos, and Isan, he creates layered images that intertwine the seen and unseen, the real and imagined. Through painting and experimental techniques, he investigates forms of coexistence that resist unity yet remain inseparably connected.

Since 2020, Wannasorn has participated in numerous group exhibitions in Chiang Mai, Bangkok, and Nakhon Pathom, steadily developing a distinct voice that bridges political narratives, spiritual traditions, and cultural memory. His upcoming exhibition Tropic Reverie (October 2025) at Jaski Gallery, Amsterdam, marks his first solo presentation outside Thailand.
